Anders works in Schjødt's dispute resolution department, where he has been a key contributor in several complex disputes. His key area of expertise is maritime and offshore-related matters. In his time as an academic research assistant, during his studies and in Schjødt, Anders has obtained an in-depth understanding of the offshore industry, with particular focus on contracts.

Anders wrote his master thesis on offshore rig-modification contracts, and he is therefore very familiar with modification contracts, which have generally not been studied. He has also studied and been involved in disputes with contracts of affreightment, drilling contracts and joint venture agreements. Anders has also worked as a consultant at the Homeowners' Union (Huseiernes landforbund"), which made him familiar with the issues regarding real estate, e.g. landlord-tenant contracts and real estate purchase and sale contracts. He has studied and worked with intellectual property rights on a general level.

During his time at the University of Zürich, Anders also took classes in compliance with special focus on the OECD Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises. During his studies at the University of Oslo, he was a contributor to the app "Domsguiden", a tool designed to help law students understand how to read and use case law. Anders has held courses for students of Human Resources about labor law and general legal reasoning. He is fluent in English, and understand and can make himself understood in German to some extent.
